MIKKIE'S CORNER - Health and Nutrition

Water and its importance in your body

Eating may look different for each individual but there is no leeway when it comes to water – every body requires it. There's no question your body is healthiest when you practice proper hydration.

Although, there lies some confusion about why water is important.

Water facilitates countless physiological processes, including digestion, elimination of waste, and protection. It all starts in your head; specifically, your mouth, in the form of saliva, as well as your brain. We need to have a different relationship with water. Many people attribute it to being boring. There are many ways to make water intake more fun. Herbal teas made warm or cold or having flavored non sweetened carbonated waters are a few such ways. With no additives these all are the same as drinking water. Also, the 8x8 rule to begin with - 8oz 8x per day and the 1x1 rule - no more than 1 liter per hour as that's all the kidneys can handle.

... to be continued next week
